Notes: For students not majoring in Native American Studies, the minor only requires 18 credit hours. If you have already taken a NATV course or two, you are closer than you think to adding another credential to your academic record.

If you are majoring in another discipline in the College of Arts & Sciences, adding Native American Studies as a second major will enrich your academic experience at USD and show future employers that you have the essential critical thinking and communication skills that they are looking for. We'll make it easy -- the NATV double major only requires 28 credit hours rather than the 34 needed for the major alone.
